

Part of the work of B3 is to verify service compositions with respect to their specification by preconditions and effects. This specification is based on predicates derived from an underlying ontology, which may also contain additional knowledge formalized by rules. We present a technique to transform this type of specification into a satisfiability (modulo theories) problem.